NEAR Alden, on the Southern Minnesota railroad, Saturday, Chas. Collett, from Gardner City, while in the act of oiling the cylinder gear of a threshing machine, had his clothing caught, taking his neck into the gearing, and tearing the jugular vein entirely out. He lived only a few minutes.

A SERIOUS affray occurred in Detroit on Sunday night. James Grant and S. Whiting quarreled, when Grant drew a revolver and snapped it twice on Whiting. The latter then seized a stone of about two pounds weight and struck Grant on the head with it several times, knocking him down and inflicting some ugly wounds.

LAST Wednesday night, Bethel and surrounding country, in Anoka county, was visited by a thunder storm, accompanied with a great deal of wind. His wife, getting uneasy at his prolonged absence, went in search of him, and found him in an insensible condition.

A LITTLE daughter of J. O. Chandelle of Janesville, Waukesha county, met with what might have been a very serious accident last Thursday. She was on the veranda of the second floor, engaged in playing with some marbles, when she fell through under the railing ten or twelve feet, to the plank walk below. She was picked up senseless, breathless and supposed dead, but soon recovered breath and consciousness. No bones were broken, but many serious bruises were found and a cruel gash on the chin. It was simply a miracle that she escaped with so little harm.

Gov. Davis' Order for the Prosecution of Ex-Auditor McIlrath.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
St. Paul, Sept. 7, 1874.

Hon. George P. Wilson, Attorney General: Sir—During the last session of the Legislature the Senate appointed a committee to investigate the manner in which the State Auditor's office was administered during the term for which Mr. Charles McIlrath held that position.

The committee, which was authorized to sit after the adjournment completed its labors on the 4th instant and has submitted to me its report together with the testimony upon which it is based.

Access to the report and testimony having been given to the representatives of the press before the document left the hands of the Committee, I deem it my duty to call your attention to the facts which the Committee state to be the result of the investigation.

It is also submitted by the report that the evidence established that the late State Auditor received on account of timber and on the State lands $77,041.13 more than he has paid the State Treasurer; that his management of certain stumpage transactions in Kandiyohi county and of certain lands in Hennepin county has resulted in a loss to the State of the further sum of $12,618.04.

It is also submitted by the report that the quantity cut was by collocation between the claims of the logs and the examiners, so under-estimated that, allowing for all that the State received and all that its officials received and did not pay over, the State was defrauded of large sums of money.

The report also discloses certain transactions by the late State Auditor with the firm of P. M. Myers & Co. (bankers) in New York, which will demand the strictest scrutiny by you, may you ascertain whether the State has any claim against the Auditor by reason thereof.

The Committee is directed to bring suit at the earliest possible moment against Mr. McIlrath and his sureties for every cause of action which in your judgment can be sustained against him or them.

You are also requested to intervene in the Probate Court of Ramsey county in the matter of the estate of Butler Comstock, deceased, by putting in an account in favor of the State of Minnesota against said estate for such amounts as may be warranted by the evidence adduced by the Committee, or by any other information of which you may be possessed.

You are also requested to bring suits in the name of the State of Minnesota, plaintiff, against all the persons whom the evidence discloses as having conspired with any officer to have the quantity cut by them underestimated, and who have not paid for all the timber actually cut—the amount paid to any person as a bribe, not returning or exacting payment for the full quantity, not to say as a reward to a State officer. You will also please proceed to assert in the cause the rights of the State in all cases not above stated which your examination of the report and evidence may bring to your attention.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. E. DAVIS, Governor.

In view of the above letter it becomes of interest to know who were on Mr. McIlrath's official bond. They are, as appears from the books in the Secretary of State's office, as follows:

First term, filed Jan. 12, 1861—Orville Brown, D. S. Norton, M. Cook, H. W. Holly, for $20,000.

Page and R. M. Drake were the platform committee, and they reported the following, which was adopted:

The people of the First Congressional District of Minnesota, in convention assembled, do resolve:

First. That the present management of public affairs is not such as to command or receive the confidence and support of the people. The official prodigality, the recklessness and corruption of those in power, the misappropriation of public money for private purposes, the encouragement and support of corrupt rings organized for the purpose of defrauding the people and plundering the public treasury; the organization of vast monied monopolies by a system of special legislation, thereby securing to them enormous privileges and protection not granted to the mass of the people; the widespread official corruption, both State and national, and the utter disregard of the rights of the people by imposing oppressive taxes upon them for the purpose of enriching the few, and the control of the government by the corrupt railroad and other corporations above all party prejudices and unite to remove corrupt officials from power and to elect in their places those only who will administer the government in the interest of the people.

Second. That we repudiate the modern doctrine that railroad and other corporations are above and beyond legislative control, but to the contrary we assert that it is not only within the conventional power but is also a plain duty of the Legislature and of Congress to regulate by wise, fair and appropriate legislation all railroad and other corporations engaged in the carrying trade of the country, to the end that the producer may receive the just reward of his labor, and that injustice and oppressive extortions on the part of these corporations shall cease.

Third. That we hail with joy the uprising of the farming interest of the country against oppressive legislation influenced by gigantic combinations of capital, because this great vital interest has so long neglected and oppressed by laws passed for the protection of others and iniquitous interests, can receive no adequate redress of existing wrongs except through well organized, intelligent practical action. We firmly believe that the best interests of the country can be safely entrusted to the keeping of the great producing classes of the country. As Mr. Clay once expressed it, "There is no doubt but that the economy of the country is the safe depository of the public liberty." In all time and under any possible direction of the agricultural class must be such the most numerous and powerful, and will ever retain a preponderating influence in the councils of the nation. Nor should the farmers abate their patriotic effort until corporations yield obedience to the laws, the power of vast monopolies is broken, the question of transportation is put forever at rest, and the plunderers driven from office and their places filled with honest and otherwise injurious herself.

TWO DAYS.

BY GRACE H. HORN.

YESTERDAY.—WHY WAS I BORN?
'Tis true, as they say, that the world has grown old;
The heart of the world is now stagnant
and cold;
The child, from its cradle, is taught to deceive—
How foolish the man who in man can believe!

Ah! what is the meaning of life and sin?
Temptations without, and doubts within?

Ah! why was I born to suffer all
this?

And why not have lived in perpetual
bliss?

The friends I deemed true are in selfishness clad,
The fact that were fairest, corrupted and
bad;

My heart in my bosom is heavy with
care,

And thick, darkening clouds are filling
the air.

No small ray of comfort awoke me I see;
A sense of infatuation is falling on me.

The reckless and wicked achieve a success;

Refused faithful have their best efforts to
bliss.

Y in poor city grass, closed in by dull
walls,
Excluding the light which so graciously
falls;

It seems almost cheerful, and keeps on
the green;

Makes efforts to live, uncurled for, unseen.

Bound now rises Fate, like the stern ad-
dament,
Which shuts from my life all the light
which I want;

I'll own to these things I'm inclined to denounce—

I can't understand the philosophy, sir.

TODAY.—THE WORLD IS NOT OLD.
Who says that the world has grown old,
And faded in its primeval grave?
Some beauty of color or form
In everything round me lies the bloom!

Who says that the world is growing old?
Why, even to live is delight!

A fountain of power and love

Is life; that's all it looked at right.

The world is all smiling to-day;
The earth, and the sky, and the sea;
And smiling the faces of friends,
And one who's far dearer to me!

Who says the world is growing old?
It's almost as young as life,
Provided it remains with life.

As fresh at the dawning of light.

O, beautiful world! Our earth home!

All creatures and ye of my kind!

When scattered the clouds of the mind!

Death of Judge R. B. Curtis.

(From the Chicago Tribune, Sept. 16.)

This eminent jurist, whose reputation long since extend beyond the boundaries of Massachusetts died yesterday at Newport, R. I. He was one of the highest scholars in that famous class of 1829 whose achievements have so often been told in verse by Holmes; and the maturity of his character, and clearness of his mind, his conspicuously in those days. His statement of a case in the college societies was of singular force and perspicuity. It was hardly necessary to argue a question after he had stated it. He graduated with high honors, and entered the Law School, where his talents were at once recognized. He began practice in Greenfield, and afterwards removed to Boston, where he resided at the time of his death, and was a member of the Corporation of Harvard College from 1836 to 1851, when he was appointed to the Supreme Bench. Mr. Curtis resigned his position on the Bench because he felt it necessary to provide for his family. His law practice was one of the most lucrative in New England. Though he studiously kept aloof from politics he was the candidate of the Democrats in the memorable Senatorial contest of 1841, and no candidate found a more unwavering support. He was a member of the Commission on the new city charter. Hianame was frequently mentioned in connection with the Chief Justiceship before the appointment of Judge Waite. He was thrice married, and leaves children by each wife.

AMONG the articles exhibited at the late State Fair, none attracted more attention or gave greater satisfaction than the School and Office Furniture of Stone, Parker & Co., of Minneapolis. Their firm is rapidly extending its business in this and adjoining States.

EXCELLENCE of work, durability of material, and beauty of finish, characterize the School and Office Furniture of the Minnesota Desk Company, Minneapolis.

The Buckeye Challen- The improved Buckeye Table Rake and Mower combined, exhibited at the State Fair, as usual, took the First Premium. The manufacturers of this celebrated machine, C. Aultman & Co., not satisfied with the high degree of excellence they have already attained, which, in every trial, has rendered them victorious over all competitors—are still striving to render the Buckeye as perfect as possible. They are out with other improvements for 1875, consisting of an ingenious tilting lever, under the complete control of the driver, to raise and lower the guards on rough ground. This improvement will at once recommend itself to the farmers, as it enables them to ent lodge and matted grass, and gives them the utmost confidence in the ability of these machines to cut any grain or grass that grows. The second improvement consists of a new frame, very light and strong, all the boxes being so covered and protected as to exclude the grit and dirt. In all trials on soft, rough grounds, in wet and heavy grain, which will test the capabilities of any machine, the Buckeye comes out with fresh laurels as the champion machine of the age—a machine without competitors. It is of light draft, can be easily worked with two horses, and need only be seen to be appreciated.

Mr. R. H. Jones of Minneapolis, Agent for Minnesota, represented the machine at the State Fair, and knowing as he does of its great merits, confidently recommends it as being the best machine in the world.

GAMBLING IN PARIS.

A Descent by the Police.

A Paris correspondent of the London Daily News gives the following lively description of a descent by the French detectives upon a private gambling house:

We go to the street where the Countess — resides, but do not drive up to her door. Our cab pulls up round the corner of the adjoining street, and the five others come to a stand behind it. At the same time about a dozen policemen in uniform walk down the recesses of different doorways, where they had been standing apparently waiting for us, and as fast as the detectives alight from the cabs, they get in and take their places, drawing down the blinds, however, so that no crowd may be attracted by their appearance. From this moment no time is lost—every thing is done at post pace. M. Claude leading the way, the agents drop behind in the order of their riding, and the house, which the last of us are to remain on the pavement outside the house; the following pair on the first flight of stairs, while the remaining five will accompany M. Claude wherever he goes, but always keeping their places in couples and remaining about a yard separate from other pairs, that there may be no crowding or confusion. He would be a clever gambler who could break through such an array of sentinels; and not one of those in the house does break through it. They are destined to be caught, every one of them.

The first to fall into the net is the well dressed and pompous concierge. In the hall, he has pulled the door chain; the door has clicked open, and before he can recover from his surprise this janitor has seen eight men walk coolly past his lodge without deigning to notice him. It is only on the arrival of the ninth and tenth, that are to keep watch in the vestibule, that he learns he is a prisoner, and must not communicate, she becomes weary to death; in consequence of which it is permitted to her to enjoy the Body of the Lord even on Good Friday. Every morning at 6 o'clock she visits the church, which is a good long way off; only on Fridays she does not do so, but on the other days she is done by the Lord Wegzehrund being brought to her on Friday by the high church Bishop in person, and obligato. We found her very anxious as though for an ordinary patient suffering from a grave malady; in the little brick-floored room Louis was kneeling before the table, all streaming with blood. She took the holy communion with passionate desire, almost greedily. At 2 o'clock P. M. she fell into an ecstasy. The Lord Bishop went to her a little time before to see if perhaps she would pass the appointed time in a state of swoon. But exactly at two o'clock she became silent and her eyes glazed. The priest of the place declared that Louis should be sent a special missal, and several sorts of apparitions during her ecstasy. First she sees God in His glory; then the sufferings of Christ, especially the last stages of the same. At a little before 3 o'clock Louis falls down; at three she spreads out her hands. What is very remarkable in these spasms is that, although the spirit is transferred to other regions, it lives for the immediate resumption of the body. For instance, when a consecrated object or article is brought near Louis, it produces a soft smile upon her countenance. She smiles when prayer is going on. At particular moments (we are fourteen in all, and the priests were praying the breviary) as for instance, at the Gloria Patri, at the words, "Misericordia et misericordia," then the sufferings of Christ, and especially the last stages of the same. At a little before 4 o'clock Louis falls down; at three she spreads out her hands.
